I left you a very rough list, meant to at least provoke some thought and discussion. It's still weak in some areas that we should discuss. Also, I neglected to mention that Linus Pauling would be a posthumous award. And I neglected to include another possible posthumous awardee, Carl Sagan.

TEXT:

You know - they just renamed the place where the Rover landed the Carl Sagan Memorial Station.

I wonder if that boosts Carl Sagan postumously for a Medal of Freedom. You know, he was one of the very first to sound the warning on climate as well.

I think we already gave you Sherry Rowland - who won the Nobel for discovering the ozone hole but also is a notable on climate as well. He's alive.

Another good dead person is Ansel Adams.

We're having trouble thinking up great living people. I guess that's everyone's affliction these days.
